

If I was an Ocean Protector, what creature would I be?

If I was an Ocean Protector, what would I be? I would be an oarfish. Why? I would be an oarfish because it has a ribbon-like body and I could use it to get into places the team could not get into.

What power would I have? I would have the power of super hearing. Why? I would have it because I could be able to hear a conversation that might help us on our mission. The oarfish is rarely seen and is considered endangered. I think its personality would be sneaky, smart, and cunning. By being smart and cunning, I would be able to solve a problem that the team is having trouble with.

An oarfish can get as long as ten to fifty feet. Other names for the oarfish are the ribbon fish and the king of herrings. Its scientific name is Regalecus Glesne. Its depth range is down to three thousand feet. Its habitat is the Mediterranean Sea and the East Atlantic Sea. It has a silver body and a red dorsal fin.

By using my super hearing, I'd also be able to hear the conversations of the enemies if they are close by. My ribbon-like body could be able to slither out of nets if the Ocean Protectors get caught. Oarfish have been known to wash up on shores after storms. By being sneaky, I would be able to disguise myself to get information about things that our mission might involve. That is what I would be if I was an Ocean Protector.

Why is it important to save the world's oceans?

Why is it important to save the world's oceans? All life will be gone. The water wouldn't be suitable for the creatures that live in the water. Those creatures will die. That eliminates a source of food. The water would not be suitable for humans to drink thereby killing off the humans and all other life on the Earth. Also, the animals that live in the water now are suffering. Penguins are covered in oil, little fish are tangled in nets, and big fish have the plastic things that hold soda bottles around their necks, choking them. How would you like it if someone came into your house and threw oil on you and your house? How would you like it if someone just threw a net over you? How would you feel if someone came up to you and started choking you with the plastic thing that holds soda bottles? I know I wouldn't like it at all. Animals and fish are God's creatures too, and we should treat them as such. If we start cleaning up oceans now, the oceans will be clean so life can flourish on Earth. If we don't stop polluting the oceans, as I said, everything will die leaving Earth a sad, barren planet. Animals and fish in the ocean are being tortured by everything we do to the ocean. Basically, what I am saying is that Earth needs water and without it, everything would die. That is my paper and I hope you enjoyed it.
